A colorful butterfly caught her eye and began chasing her. After some time, when he turned around, his family was nowhere in sight. They had moved on. He panicked and ran in search of his mother. As he ran, he slipped and fell, hurting one of his legs. It was late at night. I didn't know what to do. The fawn noticed a light coming from afar. He started stretching towards her. The light was from a house. When he got to the door, a dog started barking. This scared the fawn, but since he couldn't run and was too tired, he just sat down. Eight-year-old Ankur left home upon hearing her dog bark. He saw a small animal sitting in front of the door. But in the dark, I couldn't figure out what it was. Dad, look! There's an animal in front of our house, Ankur shouted at his father. Armed with a pole and a torchlight, Ankur's father approached the animal with caution. Oh! This is a fawn! And I think it hurt his leg, Dad said. Ankur rose to the fawn and saw him looking back at them. He needs help. Ankur, hold the torch as I carry it inside, the father said. Ankur's father was a forestry officer and therefore knew how to give first aid to the injured animals. He picked up the fawn and brought it to the house. With The Help of Ankur, his father cleaned up his of the fawn and covered them Bandages. He must have separated himself from his son. What do we do, Dad? asked Ankur. We can't do much now as it's already dark. The fawn can stay in our house tonight. Tomorrow morning, we're going to get his son and return him to his family,' the father said. But Dad, can't we keep him with us? asked Ankur. Son, you know how worried your mother and I get when you don't come back from the playground in time. Similarly, imagine how worried this fawn's mother would be. Like you, he needs his family too, the father said. You're right, Dad, said Ankur. Can I come with you tomorrow? Of course! Dad replied, smiling. The next morning, Ankur and his father woke up early. Dad put the fawn inside a big box. Dad, why did you put the fawn inside a box? asked Ankur. The fawn cannot walk properly, as his wounds have not yet healed. So, we're going to have to take him. It is easier to carry it with this box; In this way, he will also be safe from being attacked by other animals in the forest, the father explained. Ankur and his father departed in the woods with the fawn. They scoured the forest floor to find clues that might have been left by the deer. After walking a short distance, they found the tracks. Look, Ankur! These hoofprints belong to the deer. It has to be around somewhere. Walk quietly and keep an eye out for the village,' said the father. Ankur and his father followed the hoofprints. Soon, they found grazing grazing in a small clearing. They stopped a short distance from the pram and pulled the fairy out of the box. They pushed him in his son's direction. As soon as the fawn saw his family, he cried loudly and pulled towards them. His mother ran to him and licked him everywhere. Ankur and his father were elated to see the fawn reunited with his mother. Mother.
